

AGITS Booklet published

This booklet reports the main findings from the 10 PhDs completed under AGITS, a 4 year research project of the Environmental Policy Group at Wageningen University. The main questions addressed by the booklet include: What role can governments, industries, branch associations, international traders, local communities and non governmental organisations play in motivating producers and consumers to adopt more sustainable practices? What democratic space do members of the public have to campaign against polluting (state-owned) plants? What role can researchers from OECD countries play in facilitating more sustainable practices?
